I we continue to fool with the people much longer there will be aroused in this for our public men and for our courts that othing can arrest. The strength of that sentiment we see to-day. It is the most narvellous revolution in our history. We n i that the spirit of discontent is so broad that it has uprooted and destroyed, in spite of all his official power and patronage, the President of the United States when attacked by a man who is skilful enough to use this feeling of discontent intelligently Does anybody think that the Republican party can remedy any of these evils comof, no matter whom it nominates? They produced them all . President Roose velt, quick to see the fading and falling greatness of the old Republican organiza-tion, all the sophistries, expedience and false promises, has deserted the old ship, hae jumped into a pirate craft and has taken up a new cry, has turned his back upon the historyjof his party, has admitted that it cannot now longer be defended and has turned to a new field as the only place where sibly a victory in the name of Republican can be achieved.

Attorney-General Thomas Carmody said:

In the coming campaign Democratic criticism can no longer be said to be partissan denunciation. We have the spectacles of an ex-President going from one end of the land to the other, denouncing his Republican successor, and the latter, forgetting the dignity of his great office, retorting in kind. Could one imagine a Cleweland or a McKinley for the sake of reelection pursuing such a course? If assailed would not either one of liese men have simply pointed to the record made and let that speak for him. The record of each man as set forth by the other gives the inside facts and shows that neither deserves the confidence of the people nor possesses the qualifications for like office of Prosident.
